

Milestones (16 mile ~~and 17 mile~~)

Reisterstown, Maryland

Public Access

These sandstone mileposts are typical of mileposts on nineteenth century turnpikes, each marking the miles to the terminus at either end of the turnpike. Two remain in the Reisterstown Historic District.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

These identical mileposts, one mile apart, are of sandstone with heavily weathered faces. Arched at the top, their north and south sides retain traces of a straight line tooled texture, parallel to grade. The milepost at 337 Main Street retains traces of the letter B, undoubtedly once part of an indication of miles to Baltimore. Traces of whitewash indicate an early if not original finish to improve their visibility at night.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Conewago Road, Great Road to Baltimore Town, High Street, Main Street, The Reisterstown Turnpike --- without its continued presence over 220 years, Reisterstown would not have remained as viable and active a town as it has. Its fortunes, atmosphere and character were heavily dependent upon the traffic which daily passed up and down between Baltimore and Pennsylvania. The townspeople were involved in the trades and services which bore directly upon the traveler; blacksmiths, wheelwrights, saddlers, tanners and hotel keepers. Taverns were maintained for comfort along the route. Many of the tradesmen built houses which also contained their businesses right along the road. The great era of turnpike building in Maryland 1790-1840 was the time that Reisterstown also burgeoned.

The Turnpike went from Franklin Street in Baltimore, along the present Pennsylvania Avenue and Reisterstown Road to Pennsylvania ... "It was begun in 1806 and was finished in 1815 and the turnpike company had permission to collect tolls" (Hollifield op. cit p. 32). Milestones were placed along the road during this period. Today they can still be spotted, but most have been completely effaced. There are two remaining in the Reisterstown Historic District: the 16 mile stone across from 342 Main Street and the 17 mile stone at the southeast corner of Hanover and Butler Roads.

These sandstone mileposts are typical of mileposts on nineteenth century turnpikes, each marking the miles to the terminus at either end of the turnpike.
